

ARKANSAS METHODIST

THE OBEDIENT LIFE, Or Bible Studies on Sanctification. No. 3.

The precept which Moses gave the children of Israel to "circumcise the foreskin of their hearts," and the promise that "the Lord their God would circumcise their hearts," to which we have alluded in the foregoing article, gives us about the same idea of the joint agency of God and man in the work of sanctification...

Since the word sanctify contains its meaning an act of separation, it may be so understood in the text under consideration as far as it describes the act of the creature. The people were exhorted to separate themselves from moral defilement, from the pollutions of sin, by putting it all away from them.

In other words, God would have us to observe the distinction between moral good and evil, by teaching them the ceremonial difference between meats clean and unclean. If they should be careful what they ate, much more should they be careful what they did, for it was this, and not the eating of unclean meats, that filled their inward natures.

beasts, Christ has brought heart-power enough into the world to remedy all these things. What a world we would have, if everybody would allow Christ to give them a new heart. God can afford to give the man who loves "God with all his heart and his neighbor as himself" the freedom of the universe; for he will not hurt nor harm in all God's holy mountain.

These holy women raise their voices to insist that the whole world ought to love the Lord whom they love so well. They interpose no theory, as if they would say, we don't care how you come to love our Lord, just so you love him and join with us in breaking an alabaster box of precious ointment on his head.

On Jan. 19, 1824, in Lincoln Co., Tenn., there was a stir in that locality for a baby boy had made his advent into the world, and became a part of its subsequent history. This was in the home of James and Mary Clark. Of his boyhood and manhood the writer is not advised.

and kissed me, and said: "God bless you; you are next to Morris with us." Little did I think then, and far less thought I when first and last we met he was helping to write this memoir of his useful life; but so he was.
