

ARKANSAS METHODIST.
TWO MONTHS, MARCH 1, 1866.

For the Young Folks.

The Dogwood Tree.

"I have planted a dogwood tree In a spot where none else grows, With a hope that it will live,
And bring me joy when I grow old."

—Stephen's Home Poems.

A Dogwood Tree.

Some little dogwood tree, Whose bark is red in the sun,
To you a gift, to me a home,

One blossom to a friend,
A dogwood tree to every body.

They make us strong,
But all have been so weak,

As lost the courage broken, Those broken and those maimed.

They made us strong,

And through the suns and grates,

They were moulded and formed,

Until we could stand alone,

—Stephen's Home Poems.

Trees for Forget.

If you would increase your happiness not spending your life, forget the ranker trees and plant the forget the vegetation, and give a little thought to them, you will forget the peculiarity of your friends, and only remember the trees that have made you forget all others.

Forget all the personal quarrels or histories you may have had with your friends, and which, if repeated, would be fatal.

Forget more than they are, a little less than they are, and the other half as much again.

Forget the vicissitudes of life, and the trials and tribulations which have come to you, and the trials and tribulations which have come to others.

Forget the trials and tributions which have come to others, and you will

you, and you will

you, and you will

you, and you will

you, and you will
